

To whom it may concern, I am currently a subscriber to XM radio and I feel that the current service that they are offering for traffic and weather is very useful to the subscriber. Subscribers to satellite radio are generally people who have to travel some distance to get to their job or travel is part of their job. The channels that satellite radio offer are much quicker and easier not to mention safer to find than FM or AM channels in a city that you are not familiar with. I also feel that it is not the job of government to regulate competition between companies. If the NAB is scared of losing business maybe they need to improve upon their product instead of regulating the competition.

Thank you for your time,

Josh Youngling
